This study benefitted from the support of several people. First, I owe a debt of gratitude to my committee chair, Dr. Peter Philips, whose focused comments were most useful. Dr. Philips's willingness to work with me after my long hiatus is greatly appreciated. However, I am most grateful for the strength and perseverance that he displayed in seeing that this study is completed during perhaps the hardest time of his life, the loss of his dear son John.

I would also like to thank the other committee members for their comments and support: Drs. E. K. Hunt, Norman Waitzman, Cihan Bilginsoy, and Mark Prus. Dr. E. K. Hunt's critical perspective was always refreshing and I benefitted considerably from his lectures and written work.

A special debt is owed to two other professors: Drs. Ernest Randa and Dr. Gail Blattenberger. The many stimulating sessions with Dr. Ernest Randa in which he shared his broad and deep knowledge of history and his insights into economic history were crucial for the early stages of this study. Dr. Gail Blattenberger provided continuous support and encouragement, but I am most grateful for her friendship.

Finally, I wish to express my gratitude to members of my family. My brother, Imad, provided unconditional support and freed me from "real life" obligations for which I will always be grateful. Although extremely difficult to
